

Ideas Sheet

Plan routes by public transport and create guides for your organisation.

Route planning is an important skill for getting around in your local community – and for going further afield.

It is important to know how to get safely to your destination and how long it will take.

There may be more than one way of travelling to the same place, and you may need to change buses, trains or trams along the way.

First find information on public transport routes and timetables – pick up leaflets and timetables at stations or information centres.

Many public transport companies and local authorities also provide information on routes and timetables online.

Travel the route with a group or with people supporting you.

Make notes or drawings or take photos as you travel along the route, identifying stops and key landmarks such as buildings and parks.

Create friendly and accessible guides or leaflets of your favourite routes for everyone in your organisation to use.

Include useful information and facts about the most interesting stops along the route.
